WHY DRAFT THIS PROSPECT?

To the Triumph hiring team,

Triumph's VIP Activation Lead role brings together what I enjoy most: finding opportunities, starting conversations, and building relationships that last. I've spent my career doing that through enterprise sales and corporate advisory, and much of my personal life connecting with people through TCG collectibles, luxury goods, and alternative assets. I live for the connection: learning what someone is chasing, earning their trust, and following through. This role lets me bring my sales and account management experience to a market I know as a collector.

Beyond client development and understanding individual needs, I've negotiated complex, multi-party transactions and helped grow a business where no playbook existed. I've led high-performing teams, established processes, and improved day-to-day operations. Those experiences shaped how I work: take initiative, create structure, and stay accountable for the outcome.

When evaluating a prospect, I want to understand what motivates them, what they value, and what would make a conversation worth their time. I use that understanding to personalize my approach, then rely on data and feedback to improve how I prioritize outreach and follow up. At Triumph, I'd bring that approach to identifying promising users, earning their trust, and making the transition to a dedicated VIP host feel personal and seamless. Give me an objective, and I'll figure out what's needed, develop a clear strategy, and execute.

I have experience in both corporate and startup environments. Corporate work sharpened my professional discipline, but I feel most at home in the energy, speed, and adaptability of a startup. I find satisfaction in helping a company grow through cultivating client relationships, implementing effective processes, and turning new opportunities into results. It's rare to find a place where my skills, experience, and personal interests all align. That's why joining Triumph is the real chase.

Sincerely,

ALFONSO PINTOR
