WHY DRAFT THIS PROSPECT?

To the Triumph hiring team,

Every new vertical Triumph explores starts with the same foundational questions: where to source it, how to price it, and how to bring it to market. I've spent a lifetime answering those questions, professionally in capital equipment and real estate, and personally through TCG collectibles, luxury goods, and alternative assets. I live for the hunt: researching value, finding overlooked opportunities, negotiating, and making a deal. Triumph's New Vertical GTM Execution Strategy Associate role offers a chance to combine that lifelong interest with my career experience at a larger scale.

My background includes sourcing and valuing capital equipment worldwide, building analytical tools to match supply with demand, and growing a business where no playbook existed. Those experiences shaped how I work: take initiative, think through the economics, and stay accountable for the outcome.

When an opportunity catches my attention, I want to understand what drives its value, who buys it, where supply comes from, and whether the economics hold up. I use data to challenge my assumptions and adjust as new information emerges. Give me an objective, and I'll figure out what's needed, build a data-driven plan, and follow through. I'm comfortable working independently while always putting team goals first.

I've worked in both corporate and startup environments. Corporate work sharpened my professional discipline, but it's the energy, speed, and adaptability of a startup that I'm drawn to most. I find satisfaction in seeing my work directly contribute to a company's growth. It's rare to find a place where your skills, experience, and personal interests all align, surrounded by people who share the same vision. Triumph is that place for me.
